In class we will explore the origin of the concept of wilderness. You will develop an understanding of the ethical, socio-political, and scientific forces that continue to shape that concept and fuel the ongoing debate in the western U.S. and particularly in Utah. In addition, we will examine the Wilderness Act, how wilderness is designated, and planning and management tools that are used for wilderness preservation.

The instructor for this course is Tom Hale. He has taught many courses on conservation, natural resource management, and environmental planning. He has over 24 years of experience with three federal land use management agencies, a local conservation group, and as an environmental consultant.
