Open source software provides an alternative to commercially available tools. In this seminar, we will explore some of the existing open source tools for geographical data management and analysis, with a focus on GRASS GIS, a fully featured geographical information system, with a robust set of geoprocessing tools.

With an emphasis on practical applications, we will look at location and data management, scripting and links to other software, including open source databases and extended data analysis tools.